

CONVERSATIONS

One of the most effective ways to help people understand reproductive freedom is conversation. The purpose of a Rights Night is to have these conversations in circles of comfort. This doesn't mean that intimidating questions won't come up. We've drafted a few common questions and some helpful responses to keep the conversation going:

“Why do you support abortion?”

I believe we should all be free to make decisions about our own bodies, lives, and futures—and 8 in 10 Americans agree.

Politicians aren't qualified to weigh in on our personal medical decisions, and they shouldn't be able to restrict people from accessing care.

“You can't support abortion and be a person of faith.”

Supporting abortion and being a person of faith are not mutually exclusive! I support abortion because of my faith, not in spite of it, because my faith is rooted in empathy and compassion. That means not judging others for their decisions and letting them shape their own future.

“Aren't there more important issues to worry about?”

There are so many important issues, and abortion is one of them. As we've seen in recent elections, abortion is an extremely important issue for voters that wins when it's on the ballot. Reproductive freedom doesn't exist inside a vacuum—it's inherently linked to and affected by other really important issues like voting rights, LGBTQ+ rights, and racial justice.

“I saw something really bad about abortion online, is that true?”

Anti-abortion extremists know they don't have widespread support on their side—so they lie. If you see something about abortion online that seems confusing or scary—especially on social media—you should fact-check it with a credible source (the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists is a great go-to).

“How do I learn more about reproductive freedom?”

Reproductive Freedom for All (formerly NARAL Pro-Choice America) and our partners are working every day to fight for reproductive freedom, mobilize voters to elect champions who will fight for our fundamental rights, and debunk disinformation. You can learn more about our work and how to get involved at reproductivefreedomforall.org.
